And it did. And just here it may be well to note a fact which is often ignored, and that is: that it was Southern spirit, Southern enterprise, and Southern brains that made Atlanta, and some of the most active and effective builders of the new city s fortunes were men who had been most active in guiding the destinies of the old. When peace was declared in 1865, the immediate reconstruction and rehabilitation of Atlanta began. Refugees returned; thousands of others who, as if by prophetic ken, foresaw the possibilities for the future, gathered together their holdings and cast their lot with the city. Business of all kinds sprang up. Many rude shanties were improvised as storehouses; an immense wagon trade, principally from the mountains of northeast Georgia, poured its stores of produce into the city and carried away their worth in the necessities of which four years of war had deprived the people. In 1866 the population numbered 20,228, and property values aggregated $7,000,000. In 1911 the population numbered 140,000 and the property value about $100,000,000. In 1870 the Kimball House was built by Mr. H. I. Kimball at a cost of nearly $500,000. The Markham House was, a few years later, built at the foot of Wall street upon Central avenue, and for many years was a popular hotel. It was destroyed by fire, with practically the entire block upon which it stood, in 1895. It has...
