Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: .a narrow earth or drain; the body only moderately long--some show specimens have far too much length of back--and well ribbed up at the loin, though the front ribs are not sprung. The fore-legs must be straight and short, very heavy in bone, and set on well under the dog, with fairly large, compact feet, which carry very thick soles; the hind-legs moderately bent; and the tail, which is rather thick and bushy, carried gaily but never curled. The coat should be as hard as pin wire, very dense, and not too long all over the body, excepting on the ears, which are velvety, and the head and muzzle, where the hair is short and close. The best colours are steel-grey and dark brindle, but lighter shades of these are permissible, wheaten, sandy, and black, but white markings should disqualify; the average weight being 18 lbs....
