Yes--hold;--truly do, I mistress; his features relax ing into a silly smile, as terror at length quite bewildered him. Hearken, then. You have a brothers daughter in the house; and it is your part, before man, and it is your part, before God, to save her from a near danger--from--Omadhaun! fiercely interrupting herself, as well may 1 speak my words to the walls--you do not heed me. I do--of a truth I do, said Paul, giggling, and I give thanks for your visit; am glad of the heart to see you, forsooth; sit, mistress; rest you. Curp-on-Duoul! I am no mistress;--I am Onagh, that lives in the black house by the roaring sea--Onagh that the world first trampled down, and now is afraid of--Onagh the friendless, she continued, in a changed tone, left without kith or kin by them that were her own kith and kin--by them--and by him who was more to her than them--Onagh the unknown, Onagh the broken-hearted!--Faugh!--there is no use in talking to this nothing of a creature; but give me to eat! she continued, again turning on him, they haveleftme without amouthful--your meat--your meat!--she snatched it up from a stool, and retreating through the aperture, added, Starve! that was my first curse upon you both--you and your bauskuck--and now let it stick to you. She disappeared into her own cellar; but of this, poor Paul remained unconscious. His senses had quite failed him; he neither stretched out his hand...
