There is, perhaps, no opinion more firmly adopted by the vast majority of the British people, than that the present system of taxation is only continued until some other system less prejudicial to the agricultural, commercial, industrial, and social interests of the community can be devised to enable the Government to fully accomplish the enlightened and provident policy of distributive justice and freedom for all alike. Before I open my scheme I would beg leave to observe that the object proposed is to do away with all indirect taxes, and to raise all supplies by one single direct contribution, which, however, would be no tax upon land, nor upon capital, nor upon income.
